

We thought our financial plan was set. But the recent market decline sure changed that.

We want to guarantee our financial legacy for our children.

We thought we had our financial plan set.

Our goal was to leave each of our children a specific amount. We know it's tough for today's families and this was going to be our financial legacy to help them out after we're no longer around.

But the recent decline in the market has decreased the value of our portfolio. They tell us the market will come back over time. But what if we die before our portfolio rebounds? That's not what we planned.

We know we're not alone. Some friends of ours were going to leave a substantial gift to their favorite charity. Now that gift will be much smaller than they planned.

We heard that universal life insurance might be the way to go. Our agent suggested a way we could guarantee our financial legacy regardless of what the market does. He showed us how to take a part of our nest egg and put it into a universal life insurance plan. He recommended a plan that fit our needs perfectly.

Best of all, we knew that part of our financial legacy was back on track, this time for good.

Talk to me, I can show you how.
